“CALENDAR MAKING COMPETITION”

Date: 14-09-2023

The Department of Biotechnology and Microbiology recently hosted a vibrant calendar-making competition centered on the theme “Microbiology and Biotechnology for Better Health.” This event saw enthusiastic participation from both postgraduate and undergraduate students, highlighting their remarkable creativity and talent. The competition was a testament to the students' innovative approaches to integrating microbiology and biotechnology themes into visually compelling calendar designs. The winners in the postgraduate category included Sejal Nilatkar, Komal Nibrad, Ashwini Nandanwar, Pratiksha Teltumade, and Vaibhav Jaronde, while the undergraduate winners were Sourabhi Khaparde, Chetana Das, Shrishti Dhote, Shatakshi Kamble, and Khushi Anmadwar. Certificates of appreciation were awarded to all participants, recognizing their contributions and celebrating their artistic achievements. The event successfully fostered a sense of community and showcased the creative potential within the department.

Action taken: A total of 70 participants participated in this competition. Competitors enhance their skills in graphic design, illustration, and layout, learning to use design software or traditional art techniques more effectively. The competition fosters a sense of community and engagement among participants, encouraging collaboration and interaction among individuals with shared interests. It serves as a learning experience, providing insights into the process of calendar design, project management, and deadlines, which can be valuable for personal and professional growth.
